Conversation 1

- Mike: I didn't see you last week, Patricia. Were you away?
- Patricia: Yeah, I went to Washington.
- Mike: Oh, really? Did you go by yourself or ...
- Patricia: No, I went with my husband, Peter. You know him, right Mike?
- Mike: Yeah, I know him. We were classmates in high school. So, did you guys have fun?
- Patricia: Yeah, we had a great time. We really enjoyed going to museums and art galleries.
- Mike: What else did you do? Were you able to do everything you wanted to?
- Patricia: As a matter of fact, there are so many historical places to visit that we didn't have time to see them all. But Peter's sister lives there, so when we met her, she took us to all the best places.

Last week we learned about George Washington and Abraham Lincoln in this class. Today I'd like to introduce two other presidents of the United States. One was the 35th president and the other the 37th, John F. Kennedy and Richard M. Nixon, respectively.

Kennedy was the youngest person ever elected president and also the youngest to die while in office. Furthermore, he was the first Catholic to be elected to the position. He was born into a political family--his father, Joseph, served as U.S. ambassador to Great Britain, and his younger brothers, Robert and Edward, were both elected to the U.S. Senate.

As for Nixon, he was the first president to resign from office. That was on August 9, 1974. Earlier in his time as president, Nixon ordered secret attacks in the Vietnam War. However, he was also trying to resolve international problems and promote world peace. In February 1972, he became the first U.S. president to visit China. This led to a significant agreement for world peace. In May of that year, Nixon signed an important treaty with the Soviet Union that limited development of missiles and nuclear weapons. Unfortunately, in June, he also began to lie about illegal spying on his enemies, which finally caused him to quit as president.
